None of the bathrooms have an automatic door opener to help those who need it.

Either the lights can be on and you can see your notes or the lights can be off and you can see the screen but you can't seem to do both.

The chairs on rollers in the classrooms tend to make loud noises when they are not on carpet.
There aren't enough bike racks for all the bikes which can lead to irresponsible bike parking.

Either the lecturer can use the white board or the projection screen but not both.

Doors made out of glass become less aesthetically pleasing as they become smudge filled.

Trashcans cease to exist after the second floor.
In the large lecture hall, the only seats for those in wheelchairs are in the back. There is a ramp but it only takes you down a few rows own where you encounter more steps.

Perhaps this one is a little antiquated but, in this room there aren't modesty panels on the desks.

The majority of the classrooms do not have power operated doors to help those who might need it.