1) Light switches in a classroom. The lights were labeled Zone A and Zone B, but zone A and zone B were not labeled in the room. I don't know which parts of the classroom they referred to.

2) When you go down the stairs to the basement you will find a door when you reach the last floor.

However that door doesn't lead to the basement-you have to turn around a corner to find the door that leads to the basement.

3) This picture is taken on the second floor. Here the table is lower than the chair and so it cannot really be used to work on. It seems to have more use as decoration than anything else.

4) There is too much information presented here. People would only find pieces of information they were specifically looking for on the bulletin board.

5) The drinking fountains on the first floor are hidden around a wall. I know I didn't realize they were there my first semester here!

6) This is a picture of the door. It's hard to figure out whether you should push or pull it. (sorry that it is flipped!)

7) This is a picture of a door in the basement.
However this door leads all the way up to lecture hall 1404. People may think it leads to a different lecture hall or that there is an extra one in the building since it's labeled 401.

8) This picture is of a sign that was in front of the stairwell on the 2nd floor. It doesn't indicate where exactly the shelter area is or which floor we need to go to.

9) Everyone seems to get lost at Seibel. Here is an example of one of the signs which aren't very clear.

10) This is a picture of switches in the computer lab. As you can see they haven't been labeled so we don't know which one controls which part of the room.
