Adapted from a concept by John Woodruff, a landscape architect.

People who work in community design need to model in current communities that will be the base for a broader vision. The delivery of a vision requires the merging of these two concepts:

- Place-making: The art of creating a place where people want to be. It involves understanding the context in which people live and work, and designing spaces that support their needs and aspirations.

- Community engagement: The process of involving people in the planning and decision-making process, ensuring that their voices are heard and their needs are met.

These two concepts are interdependent and must be approached together to create successful community design.
